Every Minute

Sara Groves

I am long on staying, I am slow to leave
Especially when it comes to you my friend
You have taught me slow down and to prop up my feet

It's the fine art of being who I amAnd I can't figure out, why you want me around

I'm not the smartest person I have ever met

But somehow that doesn't matter

No it never really mattered to you at allAnd at the risk of wearing out my welcome

At the risk of self discovery

I'll take every moment

And every minute that you'll give meAnd I can think of time when families all lived together

Four generations in one house

And the table was full of good food

And friends and neighbors that's not how we like it now'Cause if you sit at home you're a loser

Couldn't you find anything better to do

Well, no I couldn't think of one thing

I would rather waste my time on than sitting here with youAnd at the risk of wearing out my welcome

At the risk of self discovery

I'll take every moment

And every minute that you'll give meEvery minute

Every minuteAnd I wish all the people I love the most, could gather in one place

And know each other and love each other well

And I wish we could all go camping and lay beneath the stars

And have nothing to do and stories to tellWe'd sit around the campfire

And we'd make each other laugh remembering when

You're the first one, I'm inviting

Always know that you're invited my friendAnd at the risk of wearing out my welcome

At the risk of self discovery

I'll take every moment

And every minute that you'll give me

Every moment and every minute that you'll give me

Every moment and every minute that you'll give me

Every minute
