

Blueless Bird

Joni Fatora

Why do the birds sing so early in the dawn?
Their honeysuckle melodies before my days' alarm
I imagine they're rehearsing for some big elaborate show
That I've not been invited to so I should never know
The songs they like to sing, I suppose they're not too far
From all the sings I sing when I'm alone late in my car
And if I were the postman, awake for the afternoon
I'd be the lucky someone eavesdropping on their tunes
But I think I like it better when I sleep late past their call
For all I know perhaps the birds don't even sing at all

(instrumental)

And we all know that love comes easily to you but not the hurt, you're impervious to blue
I wish I knew
How to sing about the other colors too
