

Sunrise

Petra Haden

You take away the breath I was keeping for sunrise
You appear and the morning looks drab in my eyes
And then again I'll turn down love, having seen you again
Once more you'll disappear, my morning put to shame
You take away the breath I was keeping for sunrise
You appear and the morning looks drab in my eyes
And then again I'll turn down love, having seen you again
Once more you'll disappear, my morning put to shame
Sometimes I fear that this will go on my life through
Each day I spend in an echoed vision of you
And then again I'll turn down love, remembering your smile
My every day is spent, thinking of you all the while
The times I've let myself down, my heads spinning round
My eyes see only you
The chances I've lost, opportunities tossed
Away and into the blue
