

Brooklyn (if You See Something, Say Something)

Taking Back Sunday

Well you are worth more than the man I am
Sad and in love, hands trembled of life that we would have stolen
Anyways, stolen
Well, anyway To Brooklyn, I'm homebound
A trap to the east
Marking miles of martyrs
Of better men, of better men than me
And I wanted to tell you, I just didn't know Genuine and unprepared
If you, you see something then you should say something
If you, you see something could you just say something Genuine and unprepared
If you, you see something then you should say something
If you, you see something could you just say something
Say something Something awful itches in these walls
I found a subtle genius in that white, hot hatred of yours
Misuse is practice, perfected and played
In time I'm gonna get what's mine To Brooklyn, I'm homebound
A trap to the east
Marking miles of martyrs
Of better men, of better men than me
And I wanted to tell you, I just didn't know how Genuine and unprepared
If you, you see something then you should say something
If you, you see something could you just say something Genuine and unprepared
If you, you see something then you should say something
If you, you see something could you just say something
Say something Oh, we are going, we're going, we're...
Once, twice, three times, sold! You're better off believing everything you heard was true You're better off believing everything you heard was You're better off believing everything you heard was true You're better off believing everything you heard was Genuine and unprepared
If you, you see something then you should say something
If you, you see something could you just say something Genuine and unprepared
If you, you see something then you should say something
If you, you see something could you just say something You say something Say something

Lyrics provided by

<https://damnllyrics.com/>