

Tomorrow's Still a Day Too Soon

Corey Cyr

You saw through the bullshit. Climbed a mountain of fire.
Fought a thousand battles, with a strength I admire.
You took charge of your lifetime. You always got back up.
You'd always find the ocean, inside an empty cup.
You had the heart of a lion, with the courage of two.
Hold on tight till the edge of the night,
Though tomorrow's still a day too soon. Righteous so you lived, flesh of iron and steel.
What is it you've shown me? You've shown me what was real.
You've shown me what was right, and how to do no wrong.
Shown me how to work, how to grow up tall and strong.
And if only time could stop, but the bell still strikes at noon.
Fight your way into another day,
Though tomorrow's still a day too soon. So I wish upon the stars, the ones you'd climb to the moon,
That the sun won't rise again,
For tomorrow's still a day too soon.
