

There You Are

Imogen Clark

Little house that sits upon the hill,
Lights laid out in front of us are still.

Little test of faith in you and I.

Waiting just two souls on Earth for the new day to arrive. And I can't help but think
"Who are we to be?"

'Cause every little step I take
Just leads you back to me. The whole damn world is waiting
To fall to it's fate

But when you stand beside be it's like

There's nothing we can't face. I thought I'd write you something so that
You could think of me

I want to let you know how much I
Feel you in the breeze And I think "There you are."
And I think "There you are."
And I think "There you are."

And I think "There you are." Little house down the end of your street.

After all we've been through I can see,
That you are one thing I could not replace,

If everything I knew and loved just one day fell away. I can't help but think
"Who are we to be?"

'Cause every little step I take
Just leads you back to me. The whole damn world is waiting
To fall to it's fate.

But when you stand beside be it's like

There's nothing we can't face. I thought I'd write you something so that
You could think of me.

I want to let you know how much I
Hear you in the trees. And I think "There you are"
And I think "There you are"
And I think "There you are"

And I think "There you are" Tell me all the things you don't believe.

I want to be the land where you stand free.
With every single breath you draw I see
Your city shining through the walls.

And I love you for it all. The whole damn world is waiting
To fall to it's fate.

But when you stand beside be it's like

There's nothing we can't face. I thought I'd write you something so that
You could think of me.

I want to let you know how much I
Think you in sleep. And I think "There you are."
And I think "There you are."
And I think "There you are."
And I think "There you are."

Lyrics provided by
<https://damnlyrics.com/>