Death is promised to the bee
Who's sting protects the colony.
Was it's life worth nothing more
Than honey for the queen? Life is a branch and it is a dove,
Handcrafted by confusing love.
Sign language is our reply,
When church bells make no sound. In hollow towers and empty hives,
Craved sweetness with a fear of heights.
Was it all just a grain of sand
In an hourglass? The smartest thing I've ever learned
Is that I don't have all the answers,
Just a little light to call my own. Though it pales in comparison
To the overarching shadows,
A speck of light can reignite the sun
And swallow darkness whole. Death is a cold, blindfolded kiss.
It is the finger pressed upon out lips.
It puts an unwanted emphasis
On how we should have lived. Life is a gorgeous, broken gift.
Six billion pieces waiting to be fixed.
Love letters that were never signed,
Sent to where we live. But the sweetest thing I've ever heard
Is that I don't have to have the answers,
Just a little light to call my own. Though it pales in comparison
To the overarching shadows,
A speck of light can reignite the sun
And swallow darkness whole.
