Nowhere to Run

Donna Lewis

I can still remember each mile I have travelled never knowing which way the road might turn now I face the stillness
the city of ruins
everyone in line waiting tooblackened are the hearts of those who have witnessed far into the blue
out of view
colours of the dawn
shrouded completely
everyday is slow
sinking lownowhere to run nowhere to hideand I stood inside the silent circle
with a bitter taste
of changing times
and as the voices run
run into each other
did you feel the way God kissed our eyesnowhere to run nowhere to hidethere is always time for us to begin again
I don't want to sleep and see a face I once knew but I have a father who is still living and I have a mother who's with me toonowhere to run nowhere to hide
