Lesson Learned

Jordyn Taylor

Well, the truth it fell so heavy
Like a hammer through the room
That I could choose another over her
You always said I was an actor, baby
Guess in truth you thought me just amateurThat you never saw the signs
That you never lost your grip
Oh, come on now
That's such a childish claimNow I wear the brand of traitor
Don't it seem a bit absurd
When it's clear I was so obviously framed
When it's clear I was so obviously framedNow you act so surprised
To hear what you already know
And all you really had to do was ask
I'd have told you straight away
All those lies were truth
And all that was false was factNow you hold me close and hard
But I was like a statue at most Refusing to acknowledge you'd been hurt
Now you're clawing at my throatAnd you're crying all is lost
But your tears they felt so hot upon my shirt
But your tears they felt so hot upon my shirtWell, the truth it fell so heavy
Like a hammer through the room
That I could choose another over her
You always said I was an actor, baby
Guess in truth you thought me just amateurWas it you who told me once
Now looking back it seems surreal
That all our mistakes are merely grist for the mill
So why is it now after I had my fill
Would you steal from me the sorrow that I've earnedShall we call this a lesson learned?
Shall we call this a lesson learned?

Lyrics provided by https://damnlyrics.com/