Enid

This is where I cry my silent longing for your grace,
For the paralysing motion that your moods evoke in me.

 All your wonders live inside me,
 Fill my heart with life again;
 All your rushing pleasures flee

'Round till my time comes. Now is what I see dissolving through an imprisoned mind,
Ancient thoughts have walled a cell of stone around me. This is where you catch my conscience for to torture me,
 For to live inside my nightmares, rising from the gone days.

 If I just could banish
 Those who loathe my soul,
 Those who once have been my life;
 I left their crystal cavern.
