

The Time We Knew

Mimes On Rollercoasters

I didn't know what time it was, and I didn't really care.
Seasons pass, time is lost; feelings are still there.
We sit and we watch as the days go by, no one seems to care.
Older and older we never stop aging, days we chose to share.

I never imagined that we would still be here at such an advanced age.
Gray haired and wrinkled and sagging in places; life in its final stage.
Sitting and watching out the front window, it hurts to leave the chair.
How did we get here, when did it happen? We didn't seem to care.

One day they'll take us out of this place and bury us both somewhere.
I wonder if anyone will ever visit our monument in the sea air.
Announcements are made and plans are laid, the cycle starts again.
A commitment for life, he makes her his wife, loyal till the end.
