

Solace

Fuel

Draw the shades and close my eyes
Never want to see again
I found the cost of courage high
Sometimes hard to pay
I hear the songs the sirens sing
Calling on the shore for me
So sell your soul and try to fly
The tether still remains
And all the finer things they laid upon my table
Smiled as their hooks were slowly, sinking in Another pill I'm to consume
To make me learn to feel again
Is followed by another one
To make me lose the same
God if I could recognize
The things to make me whole again
And draw this air into my lungs
Remember how to breathe
For as the curtain rose I danced as I was able Felt my deception slowly, sinking in
And so I turn to you my love
For the solace that is there
And offer any cherished thing
For a slight reprieve
I hoped that you might find me here
I could learn to smile again
And as a Balm for these wounds
Take away the sting
And as the band did play your body I did cradle
I should have known that song would have to end
