No Rehearsal

Jethro Tull

Did you learn your lines today?

Well, there is no rehearsal

The tickets have all been sold

For tomorrow's matineeThere's a telegram from the writer

But there is no rehearsal

The electrician has been told

To make the spotlights brighterThere is one seat into the circle

Five hundred million in the stalls

Simply everyone will be there

But the safety curtain fallsWhen the bomb that's in the dressing room

Blows the windows from their frames

And the prompter in his corner is sorry that he cameThere is one seat in the circle

Five hundred million in the stalls

Simply everyone will be there

But the safety curtain fallsWhen the bomb that's in the dressing room

Blows the windows from their frames

And the prompter in his corner is sorry that he cameWhen the bomb that's in the dressing room

Blows the windows from their frames

And the prompter in his corner is sorry that he cameDid you learn your lines today?

Well, there is no rehearsal

The interval will last until

The ice cream lady melts awayThe twelve piece orchestra are here

But there is no rehearsal

The first violinist's hands are chilled

He's gone deaf in both earsWell, the scenery is colorful

But the paint is so damn thin

You see the wall behind is crumbling

And the stage door is bricked inBut the audience keep arriving

'Til they're standing in the wings

And we take the final curtain call

And the ceiling crashes in

Lyrics provided by https://damnlyrics.com/