Dedicated Man

Scott Dawson

With all the senseless divorce going on around this earth
I consider how a husband might declare his family worth
Has he been the man he swore to be the day he took his bride
Satisfying every promise so to fill her heart with pride
Or somehow has he forgotten in the frantic rush of life
To bring kindness and affection to the one he calls his wife
Has he taken her for granted as the years pass slowly by
While she waits for just a little sign of romance in his eyes

Oh Lord let me honor and cherish the woman the woman that you made just for me
Don't let time replace the passion with silence and cold complacency
Help me be a man whose faithful to daily kiss her lips and hold her hand
From this day on she must believe that I will ever be ever be a dedicated man

Cause I want to be the exception
In a world full of broken families
An example of trust and commitment
The way it was intended to be
