

As Low as You Can Go

Earl Thomas Conley

(1st verse spoken)

I came home early this morning and she was gone

So I turned to the mirror

but the mirror seemed to sayDown in the valley

Across the city

Through the dark alleys

Filled with self-pity

Where people are victims of their own fearsHave you come down to the devil's table

Drinking poison, 'til you're not able

To see how your laughter has turned to tearsBoy you're as low as you can go

Left more than tracks along the road

Among the seeds that you have sown

There lies a man you should have knownBoy you're as low as you can go

Among the seeds that you have sown

There lies a man you should have knownBoy you're as low as you can go

Among the seeds that you have sown

There lies a man you should have known
