

In The Morning

Leif Vollebekk

You don't belong here, it's your broken heart I hear,
Please don't stand there, with your wrists and ankles bare.

The moon's behind the mountains, sun's beneath the sea,
A cloud that is crazy, you commit to memory.

Day in, day out, stay in, stay out,
You'll see, You'll see me.
Day in, day out, stay in, stay out,
You'll see, You'll be free.

Please, don't fall apart, it won't stop once it starts.
Don't follow me down, it won't turn things around.

I saw you in the morning, you weren't wearing shoes,
This town is so small, if you play you can't lose
Your timing or your lover, but quick you'd better choose,
Or else you'd start thinking of some excuse.

And how, without knowing, can you just go by chance,
The young ones pulled together, a harmonica's silver trance,
It's echo is not a shadow, it casts a second glance.
While the wind outside is blowing, but it don't dance.

Go on, eat your heart out, pull it up a chair,
Go on, go and ask it, if the queen is ever there,
When you know deep down inside, you shouldn't even care,
But you saw her in the morning, and her feet were bare.
