Bones

Juliette Reilly

I think I need, a brand new key
I still see you, and everything
I think I need, a little sleep
I still hear your footsteps, running after me
But if the sky should fall
From threads running through it all
I will follow you, I will follow you, I will follow you
Into the fire, out of the smoke
Walking the wire, to find our way home
We are not holy, we are not whole
But there are tiny cracks of light, between our bones
If I could reach, after you
Heaven sent moments, colored in blue
Freeze them in my mind forever
Say you will, say you will
Carry me out of the wreckage, poison me with your chill
Say you will, say you will
If the sky should fall,
From threads running through it all
I will follow you, I will follow you, I will follow you
Into the fire, out of the smoke
Walking the wire, to find our way home
We are not holy, we are not whole
But there are tiny cracks of light, between our bones
But there are tiny cracks of light, between our bones
