

The Falls

Emilia Glaser

Turning round to every thought and memory in your head seeing everyone and everywhere you've been. You wonder where it all went bad, wondering where it all went black. Fumbling over the pages of your past. The pain creeps back into your heart and you fear it's going to last. Let this moment be set free. Running from darkness you've grown tired. But the comfort you found in sleep only keeps you awake. You just want to fly away. You feel like your ten feet underground you've been digging your own grave and you find out and your struggling to find your way back to the surface back to the sun. Let this moment be set free running from darkness you've grown tired but the comfort you found in sleep only kept you awake. You just want to fly away. And now you're standing on the edge. Missed kissing your face as you looked down 268 feet off the ground. And as your feet leave the earth your solace is bound. Let this moment be set free running from darkness you've grown tired but the comfort you found in sleep only kept you awake tou just wanted to fly away.
