

Despite What You've Been Told

Two Gallants

Well, I guess by the blood stain of your lips
And the wander of your fingertips
I should prove true to my emptiness
And stay here Well, Im just a kid of ill repute
But the skin I wear is my only suit
And you, youre just a substitute
For the one that I hold dear You know, you could be anyone
God forgive my tasteless tongue
I never should have been set free I claw my eyes, I skin my face
Beg somehow to be replaced
Thats how we deal with boys like me Well, I guess for this world so sick with loss
And your service is so free of cost
I should climb down off my rugged cross
And lay with you But you know, by now it's half past late
And I only came here for escape
You youre just my next mistake
Like me to you You know, you could be anyone
God forgive your unborn sons
I hope they dont end up like me I drag my mind through streets of shame
Lay myself forgive the game
Thats how we deal with boys like me But despite what you've been told
I once had a soul
Left somewhere behind
A former friend of mine And I hate to speak so free
But you mean nothing to me
So if the street lights they shine bright
Ill get home tonight I guess by the dim light in your eyes
And that to you all things come as a surprise
I should set the steel trap of your thighs
And dive right in But to you Im just a confused child
Insecure or in denial
Go raise your robes, go have your trial
Ill let you win You know, I could be anyone
God forgive what I should've done
A thoughts enough to guilty be Yes, I guess I made this bed
But Ill take the sidewalk instead
Thats how we deal with boys like me But despite what youve been told
I once had a soul
Left somewhere behind

A former friend of mine And I hate to sound so true
But I mean nothing to you
So, if the street lights they shine bright
I'll be home tonight

Lyrics provided by
<https://damnyrics.com/>