

Haters Gonna Hate

House vs. Hurricane

Who cares if they laugh out loud
I'd wear a badge of a cat saying happy birthday to you all
Still stable enough to provide the story of a crazy man
What have you done but sit around and wish for a dream
When nothing else could be said for your hostility You know, I'm not like the others
And I can't be taken by your actions of false belief
You know, I'm not like the others
Too cold to face the truth and now
You've turned your back
Hold in your feelings, let cool just rest in It's ok, feeling what you want is overrated anyway
You've sat there for days and never once felt yourself
Intimidation disguises the truth
But what's the point of ever living if you don't live for you HATERS GONNA HATE
I believe in a world where peace is
Not a slogan but a reality
Where the basis of our existence does not rely
On the trends set by those before us
I believe in a world where people are not judged
By the clothes they wear or the music they listen to
But by the content of their characters Part with your hate, return to your youth
When all else fails, return to your youth
