

Give Out

Sharon Van Etten

There were your eyes
In the dark of the room
The only ones shining, the only ones I'd met in years. It's not because I always look down It might be I always look out I'm biting my lip
as confidence is speaking to me.
I loosen my grip from my palm
and put it on your knee.
In my way, I say
You're the reason why I'll move to the city you're why I'll need to leave You're the reason why I'll move to the city you're why I'll need to leave There was your breath on the back of my neck.
The only one holding the only one I had felt in years It's not because I always hold out it might be I always hold on. it might be I always hold on. I'm biting my lip
as confidence is speaking to me.
I loosen my grip from my palm
and put it on your knee.
In my way, I say
You're the reason why I'll move to the city
you're why I'll need to leave.
You're the reason why I'll move to the city you're why I'll need to leave. So what's with the eyes in the back of the room?
The only ones trying the only ones I have let in years.
It's not because I always give up
It might be I always give out
It might be I always give out
It might be I always give out
It might be I always give out
