

The Feel Good Song of the Year

No Use for a Name

I never thought the day would come when I
Would be the poison in the pen I use to write
You said you were alone in somewhat of a nervous tone
I guess it was the blank look on your face that was easy to replace
So then I went and drank myself into an idiot
all through the night
Recounting all my paranoid and selfish thoughts but I was right
I made a space for you inside my soul
And let my feelings kill the part that I control
So part of you was me, neglectful maybe cold it seemed Despite having the wounds we both imbibe, the scars are Somewhere we can't hide
I then stayed up for two more years just thinking of the sacrifice you made
Indifferent to the reason so apparent in the pain
I polished off another drink and taught myself to numb and drift away
For one more night so I could justify the day
So now I entertain the thought of going on all alone
But you are all the life I've ever known
I swear one day I'll get it back something that is already dead and gone
Again i see the trumpet player looking for his song
Don't worry I won't follow you, that part of me is learning to let go
What was a space is like a cancer in my soul

Lyrics provided by

<https://damnllyrics.com/>