

Ask Mr. Owl

Surrounded By Monsters

The electricity in the air tonight makes me lie awake in my bed, lie awake in my bed.

She moves.
She moves.
She moves slow.
She moves.

I'm on my back once again.
I'm on my back once again.

I can't breath, I can't breath, I can't breath, she is choking me.
I can't breath, I can't breath, I can't breath, she is choking me.

I can't get her off my,
I can't get her off my chest to catch another,
I can't get her off my chest to catch another breath.
Catch another breath.
Catch another breath.
Catch another.

I can't get her off my chest to catch another breath.
Catch another breath.
Catch another breath.
Catch another breath.
Catch another breath.

No words will come out of my mouth.
No words will come out of my mouth.
No words will come out of my mouth.

This weight is just too much.
I think that my lungs are going to explode.
I think that my lungs are going to explode.

And then with the brightest flash of light she vanished out of my bedroom.
It felt as if the entire world shook and immediately I got the chills and all she left me with was the whistling.

And the fear that will always remain.

I wish I could say that it was a dream.
I wish I could say that it was a dream.

I wish I could say it was a dream.
It was a dream, a dream, dream, dream.
