You can't even depict tomorrow in a sky so blue
I'm unable to even breathe amongst the crowds of frozen people How long has it been since I dived into this place? Would it be better if I just looked ahead and let my sorrow vent out?
But then I couldn't be very honest
Even when I hand everything over to my enemies, I can faintly sense light
I wonder if it will make it all the way down to me? I want to breathe but I'm having difficulty here Simply looking up into the dark of night, I am a diver struggling with sickness from descent
Even though I'm alive, I need to make sure
So as I aim for the deep seabed, I'll breathe once again When I turned over the map for the inside of my mind
last night
It was filled with the knowledge of what I lack, leaving me alone and frightened
Even though I always thought that I was strong
I had always thought that I was stronger than any other person A swan that had become lost was floating in the starry night sky
As though it were comfort, the rain began to fall

But it appears that we can't even become that; if a star is a star, then I can only be myself
I wonder how far I could go? Carrying a heavy anchor on my back, I utter a tiny little prayer
And just as though it were a sign, the rain began to fall I want to breathe but I'm having difficulty here
I simply look up into the dark as a diver without a means of surfacing
Even though I'm alive, I need to be perfectly sure
So as I aim for the deep seabed just this one last time
I'll try my hand at breathing
If I could come to realise just a fraction of happiness, I would never drown again
