

A Daily Anthem

David Cook

Break your neck for some substance
This is temporary sanity, an exercise in vanity
So long into the ordinary day
Wrought with fictitious tales of how there's any other way
Hold on to anything at all
It's a long way down between the summer and the fall
If I told you that you're everything would you sing along?
Would you sing along? It's a daily anthem
Would you sing my song at the top of your lungs?
And we'll all sing along, we'll all sing along
It's a half-baked blessing
For the lessons I've learned, never deserved
And we'll all sing along, we'll all sing along
Now the verses take hold
A gentle under current or more years to grow old
Say goodbye to the cold
And try to begin everything, there's life
As we sing your daily anthem
Would you sing my song at the top of your lungs?
And we'll all sing along, we'll all sing along
It's a half-baked blessing
For the lessons I've learned, never deserved
And we'll all sing along, we'll all sing along
