

Always Free

Jackie Venson

I live in a little house on the side of the street
Where the grass is dead but they water the concrete
 In the summer I watch the people float by
 In the winter I watch them weep and cry
I live in a little house on the side of the streetI live in a little house on the side of the road
Where the people starve just to feed their cars and boats
 In the fall the men they stomp in shout
 In the spring the women frolick about
I live in a little house on the side of the roadOh try to believe
 That work will set you free
Only wise men see that we were always freeI live in a place where the people wonder why
 Why the grass is always greener on the other side
 In the day they go to work and wait
 In the night they drink their fears away
I live in a place where the people wonder whyOh try to believe
 That work will set you free
Only wise men see that we were always freeOh try to believe
 That work will set you free
 Oh try to believe
 That work will set you free
Only wise men see that we were always free
