The Velvet Teen

the whole world lay before us running to the forest a cape for every crown clambered past that sylvan edge and climbed up through the foliage to see where the wind had gone though it wasn't that clear you could feel it in the air all alone in those branches swaying with the wind breathing it in from who knows when now, you can see it in my face and you can easily trace everywhere I'm going I refuse to be scared and with my finger in the air I'll know which way the wind is blowing though it isn't that clear you can feel it in the air all alone in those classes swaying with the masses breathing that air from who knows where
