

Sierra

Kevin Bluemel

In the desert, where the cities are made of gold,
There's a girl playing hopscotch with pink ribbon pigtails.
And her mom calls out from an apartment balcony,
"come on, baby! your bath is ready! it's almost time for sleep!"
And I wonder who's the father...

And I wonder what they call her - sierra. Does her mother smoke, or does she jog every morning?

Does she drink when she thinks about me?

Or doesn't she need to drink... does she have a man who works a nine to five?

Does he come home to kiss our young sierra, tuck her in and say goodnight?

(and an extra kiss for mama...)

I want that kiss, that kid, that apartment. I'm ready to settle down now, so get that man out of my bed.

I want my daughter back now, I want to kiss her,

Tuck her in and say, "goodnight, my baby girl, sierra." Sierra, sierra, sierra, sierra, I'll never know who you are,
and I don't deserve to.

My little girl, we would've been so... oh, nevermind.

But I'm ready to settle down now - yeah, I'm ready to leave that wrecking ball behind.

I could be your carpenter, and you could be my twinkling north star o'er the desert sky.
