

Sly Curl

Cinerama

Are you sure he treasures you?
Cause I think he's a philanderer
He didn't close his eyes when he kissed you
And I know he's seeing other women too
Whereas I've loved you and thought of you ever since the day I drove you into someone else's bed
(I'm still not sure how)
You'll see the new me
You used to say
I never listened to a word you said
I'm listening now
I thought you'd always be there but I woke up and you were gone
I still remember all the games we played Losing you was the biggest mistake I made, because:
I've loved you and thought of you ever since the day
I drove you into someone else's bed
(I'm still not sure how)
You'll see the new me
You used to say I never listened to a word you said --

Well, I'm listening now (I don't remember when we first met -- she was just always there, small and mink, a sly curl about her lips that drew me in. We spent the summer days inside an orange tent in the garden, feeling dizzy and Greek, drinking warm Tizer. Then one day a rush of flying ants flushed us out, blinking into the sunlight, swarming around us as we ran. We tried to lose ourselves in the woods, shutting our eyes and bumping into trees, smelling the wild garlic underfoot, but she always knew the way -- maybe she cheated, but I just thought she was smarter than me.)
