

Goodbye, My Deer!

Wyoming

my body's bound to fall down onto dying grass I stumble over fences this step could be my last after a grazing shot I hardly feel the smart there was the vulture's call and now I'm falling apart I feel the insects crawl and watch them in disgust the colours start to change they're slowly fading away and I am waiting for the rain to come, to wash it all away to clean, to breathe, the pain has come, for how long will this remain? so what's worth dying for when all that's worth is dead? who can tell? who can tell? no one can tell, my friend they tell us all the time that we are on the mend everything's withering it's slowly fading away and I am waiting for the rain
has come, for how long will this remain?
I'm waiting for the rain
