

All the Saints

Jeff Healey

Brother, my brother
I watched you get so much away
And I cried when you stop lookin' forward
And started to stray
Like an empty canvas hangin' on the wall
You're not sure what to show them
So you show them nothing at all You're supposed to be strong, supposed to be brave
'Cause that's the way someone I love should behave
You're supposed to be you and not somebody else
'Cause I've always known more about you than myself It's hard facing the truth
And embracing all the saints of my youth Heavenly sister
There's nobody safe from your charms
And all the hearts in your wake
As lost as the babe in your arms
You can line them up and knock them over
One by one
But you won't find your happiness
In the warmth of a gun You're supposed to be patient, supposed to be true
'Cause that's what I always expected of you
You're supposed to be you and not somebody else
'Cause I've always known more about you than myself It's hard facing the truth
And embracing all the saints of my youth Father, forgive me for some of the things that I've done
And in turn I'll forgive you for losing the faith of a son
Like a lonely beacon burning in the night
I still know that you're out there, somewhere out of sight You're supposed to be loving, courageous and wise
'Cause that's what I see when I look in your eyes
You're supposed to be you and not anyone else
'Cause I trusted you more than I trusted myself It's hard facing the truth
Hard facing the truth
It's hard facing the truth
And embracing all the saints of my youth

Lyrics provided by

<https://damnllyrics.com/>