Elation

Levellers

Oh, there was once a man who had lost his own smile
And he wandered the country mile after mile
Never quite knowing what he wanted to find
For his heart, it lay heavy with the weight of his mindAnd he looked at the land through the tears in his eyes
For he knew that there were those who would will her to die
And he wept for his mother as he lay at her feet
And he heard a voice singing him softly to sleepI'll be your queen, I'll be your mother, I'll be your mystical child
Be your best friend, your lover, your wife for all time
Will there ever be another, in this life of mine
Will there ever be another, like my mystical childSo, he climbed a high hill and he looked out to sea
And he heard a voice calling out softly to him
Open your heart boy for it needs to be free
And the next time you're crying come running to meSo, he walked through the valleys the trees and the fields
And he came to a river where she waited for him
And they looked at the water of life flowing by
And he heard a voice saying, "You're not alone in the fight"

Lyrics provided by https://damnlyrics.com/