

Victory Song

Jordan Page

Excitement builds on election day
Results come pouring in:
A landslide victory for the underdog;
A proud and glorious win.

And the people cheer between their tears
And call their rising son.
To spread his might, and shed his light
On darkness overcome.

And the people cry
From coast to coast,
From sea to shining sea.
But the night grows long
And our victory song
Has lost it's melody.

Now the future found in a TV set seems clear and strong and bright.
Though the world collapses beneath our feet, they swear all is right.
The brown men drown in their prison cells, and towers fall to dust.
But no one questions the official word: "In wicked men we trust."

And the people cry
From coast to coast,
From sea to shining sea.
But the night grows long
And our victory song
Has lost it's melody.

I won't stand in yesterday, I believe in the here and now.
If a revolution's coming, all you have to do is look around.
The sunrise's above, come here and take my hand,
You're not alone. Keep holding on.
Keep holding on. And don't ever let go.

Now the razor wire, like wildfire, spreads fast across the land.
And the laws they break, or the lives they take, only because they can.
Let the choir sing! Let drummers drum! Let all who hear this know.
We're marching on to our victory song:

"Let my people go."

And the people cry
From coast to coast,
From sea to shining sea.
But the night is gone
And our victory song
Has found it's melody.

Yeah, the night is gone
And our victory song
Has found it's melody.

I won't stand in yesterday, I believe in the here and now.
If a revolution's coming, all you have to do is look around.
The sunrise's above, come here and take my hand,
You're not alone. Keep holding on.
Keep holding on. And don't ever let go.

I won't stand in yesterday, I believe in the here and now.
If a revolution's coming, all you have to do is look around.
The sunrise's above, come here...
