Starfire

Greg Downey

Outside on a winter's night as the rain begins to fall
There's a chill in the air and the howl of a wolf
While the rain beats at the door seven kings will ride on
The wind up towards the mountains high and the only sound
That will break the air is the warrior's bitter cry
When the dawn of a new day will see the light
Then the strongest hearts grow old
And the warrior stands on top of the hill in the snow
Dark night with a glimmering light in the distance up ahead
In the forest they dwell with a misty spell no one heard
What once was said and the eagle fly through the clouds
While earth bleeds dark and cold
When the voices of men will ring out again all creation shall unfold
When the color of night will fade to light
And the weakest hearts go cold
And the warrior stands on top of the hill in the snow
And we're standing one and all fighting till we fall
Hoping for a better day
Never giving in until we find the words, till we find the words to say
Until we find the words to say
Burning starfire, shine in the sky
For the lives of great men, who stand by your side
When the night falls, on we will ride
For no lost souls will live on forever

Dark night on the valley blow still the horsemen follow through
It's a forest that leads to the foot of the hill that inside the magic holds
Seven strong they ride on along to the place where sorrow lies
Shadows of the night will no longer hide all their mysteries come undone
When the color of night will fade to light
And the weakest hearts go cold
And the warrior stands on top of the hill in the snow
And we're standing one and all fighting till we fall
Hoping for a better day
Never giving in until we find the words till we find the words to say
Until we find the words to say
Burning starfire, shine in the sky
For the lives of great men, who stand by your side
When the night falls, on we will ride

For no lost souls will live on forever
And we're standing one and all till we fall
Hoping for a better day
Never giving in until we find the words till we find the words to say
Until we find the words to say
Burning starfire, shine in the sky
For the lives of great men, who stand by your side
When the night falls, on we will ride
For no lost souls will live on forever
No lost souls will live on forever
