

Hardened

Waterdeep

There's a little child drowning in a pond And you would have me throw a blanket on the surface of the water even though she was your daughter and watch just how helplessly she dies for the sake of how it looks cause it's like you've read in books
It's a symbol of the way you see this life
And if a savior came upon a tray of gold you'd insist that he had already been sold even though you knew he hadn't You're afraid to trade the bad in for a good you don't know Like a certain generation in a proud and headstrong nation who expects God to dance whenever she plays the fife And if you want to talk in terms of the survival of the fittest
then take a look at the soul's auction house and whose the highest bid is You understand the fear of man but you forgot about the fear of God And to the bloody ransom that makes an ugly soul turn handsome you give a condescending nod There's a sense of desperation in your touch and you say out loud you hate it very much but you're addicted to your sadness cause it creates the touch of madness
The kind you like inside your veins Oh, why are you so hardened?
You know you could be pardoned
I guess you just will not let go of the reins
