The Man Across the Street

Tim Steinfort

The man across the street

There is a demon hid inside the heart of the man that lived across the street as he raised his voice to the family that tried to avoid the heat the echoes of his angry voice moves on into the night until he got arrested he never gave up ...

When he returned home to his family he kept his head down and he cried Iâ€™ve seen it all so many times then he tried to apologize for a day or two the peace returned but it wouldnâ€™t last for long it was all just back to normal and by normal I mean wrong.

I realise his failure ainâ€™t so hard to understand because the truth is that his wife is making love to another man the poor bastard tries to forgive the mother of his child.
and so, every once in a while, the beast awakes in the heart of the man across the street

Thereâ€™s too much disappointment in the heart of the man across the street so he beats his wife to make her feel the pain of his defeat and all the people in the neighbourhood feel sorry for his wife but they donâ€™t know the truth because they donâ€™t read between the lines.

His furniture and empty bottle breaks against the wall his wife ran to the neighbours to give the cops another call.
He puts a rope around his neck and he committed suicide maybe in the next life heâ€™s going to be alright

I realise his failure ainâ€™t so hard to understand
because the truth is that his wife is making love to another man
the poor bastard tries to forgive the mother of his child.
and so, every once in a while, the beast awakes in the heart of the man across the street

Nobody knows where it all went wrong he tries to carry on but the pain was much too strong heâ€™s hanging high there ainâ€™t no ground beneath his feet Iâ€™d have to say that I feel sorry for the man that lived across the street.

I realise his failure ainâ€™t so hard to understand
because the truth is that his wife is making love to another man

the poor bastard tries to forgive the mother of his child.
And so every once in a while, the beast awakes in the heart of the man across the street

Lyrics Submitted by Mika Heinonen

Lyrics provided by https://damnlyrics.com/