Your Worst Day

April Nicole

Imagine your darkest day, know that he's seen it all. And all he's seen it never leaves him. There is a piece of him in every call; there goes the radio.

Bright lights fill the night, sirens scream it's working time. No telling what he'll find she says he's barely breathing. Runs in their living room, prays there's something he can do. She's crying save him please I need him.

Her world is on his shoulders, he's strong, calm, brave. His best on your worst day.

Some scar his memory, some shake him to the core. And to so many he's a hero, but he's always thinking if he could have done more, there goes the radio.

Boots on, grabs his gear, about a mile from here. Someone, too many bears ran a stop sign. Pulls up and hears the screams, momma holds her baby. He won't forget the fear in her eyes.

Her world is on his shoulders, he's strong, calm, and brave. His best on your worst day. His best on your worst day.

Imagine your darkest day. Know that he's seen it all.
