

Lighthouse

Slowtide

lighthouse in the storm standing on a lonely shore an old man calls, the tide is coming in and as the waves are getting higher, swallow water more and more I start sinking to the ground, I cannot swim calling out for you to save me, s.o.s. what's going on?
oh, I forgot that you have left me with a feeling that was wrong How could I assume you'd always lend the hand that helps me out if it's you that I still count on, I will drown without a doubt 80 feet below the surface, only darkness, all I see, is a ray of hope the lighthouse shines for me and as my breast starts aching and I'm running out of air I recognise it's always been there and in this very second, how I wish that it was you who has lit the fire for me, but you haven't got a clue and again I find excuses for the things you said today cause with you I had utopia, but you have gone away
