

I'm Cool

Richard McGraw

Jesus was a reasonable man.
I love him more than I love what I am.
My mother loved me, my father loved me.
I'm cool. I wanted a life full of love,
people around me like heaven above.
Now I'm all alone and I feel like a fool
but I'm cool. If I burned bridges of bastards
I knew with my gold,
if I learned how to grow old,
time would be kind, so would I
so would this heart of mine.
Let it shine, let it stay,
resurrect or decay. I wanted to live like a king,
the wonderful things that greatness brings.
But I can not rob and I don't have a job,
so I'm cool. I took out the old pair of pliers, twisted myself into what I admire.
So now I talk about work and I feel like a jerk with no humble desire. If god had a place in the base of my heart, I might not mind when I find everything falling apart like these plans to be a gentle man. With everyone looking for something to do,
I was there looking for you.
Now you're not here and your ghost is here too,
just as well, cause you aint exactly a savior
and this ain't exactly hell. I had the most wonderful dream.
I fell in a pool, blue water, chlorine.
When I lost all my air I did not care.
I was cool.
