Cemetery Song

Brent Loveday

Lets move into that house next to the cemetery, with the two broken windows and the big cypress tree.
Well listen to the ghosts dance until dawn around pink flamingos that we've put on the lawn.
Well hang a horse shoe over the front door.
Every night Ill pray that my sins are paid for.
Thatd be something to see, you and me, next to the cemetery.
Well Ill hold you real tight if you really get scared.
Tell you its the wind or a mouse under the stairs.
Something about his place just puts me under a spell, you can play along, I promise not to tell.
Through thick and thin, good and bad, right or wrong: aint no wind so strong that can blow down this home.
Well be so happy, you and me, next to the cemetery.
Cos loving someone is so frightening, like voices in the night, so bring on the thunder and lightning.
It can only ease the fright, you never know, it just might.
So lets move into that house next to the cemetery, with the two broken windows and the big cypress tree.
Well listen to the ghosts dance until dawn around pink flamingos that we've put on the lawn.
Every haunted castle needs a king and queen.
Every night well pretend its just like Halloween.
Well be so happy, you and me, next to the cemetery.
Well be so happy, you and me, next to the cemetery.
